

Train after train of covered wagons pass by the Al Falfa farmhouse and the Farmer watches with interest as the sturdy pioneers wend their way Westward. Suddenly a chap rushes up to the Farmer and hands him Kitty Cat. "I am going to California or bust," shouts the stranger and suddenly he blows up with a loud report. Left with the Cat on his hands kind old Al takes the feline into the house. After feeding her, Al reclines in an easy chair, while Kitty Cat perches upon the back of the chair to powder her nose and use Al's bald pate as a mirror. Henry Cat discovers the whereabouts of Kitty Cat and arrives at the farmhouse with a bouquet of flowers. He pulls out his magic flute and the notes soon bring Kitty to the window. Henry greets Kitty with a resounding kiss which awakens Al. The Farmer rushes out, grabs Kitty and kicks Henry out of the way. Henry soon recovers himself and decides upon an attack. He plays his flute and summons four score of black cats. Marshalling his forces, Henry and his gang attack the farmhouse. Meanwhile, Al gives Kitty a severe call-down and she sheds a downpour of tears. The Cat Army showers the house with stones and Al dodges right and left as the missiles come through a window. All the while the Farmer holds on to Kitty. Realizing his danger, Al tries to escape through a back window with Kitty but the cats see him and he jumps in again. Then the felines leap upon the roof, into the chimney and down the stove pipe into Al's kitchen. Kitty Cat greets her rescuers but Al rushes in and chases the Cats back into the pipe. The Farmer follows the felines up the pipe and out of the chimney. Then he jumps off the roof with Kitty and lands upon a covered wagon. He crashes through the roof and the mule hitched to the vehicle runs away. Kitty cries for help and the Cats hear her. Henry runs into a hat store and seizes a poke bonnet. This he places upon a little cart and summons Milton Mouse to draw the little covered wagon. Then, he and his Cat army pursue Farmer Al and the kidnapped Kitty. Henry pulls out his revolver and shoots at the Farmer and Al returns the fire. Suddenly the wagon goes over a cliff and down into a lake. The wagon, Al and all cause such a splash that Kitty is thrown back to the top on a wave and she is greeted by Henry. With the Farmer out of the way and his sweetheart in his arms, Henry is happy. And we once more learn the truth of the moral: "Love will conquer in the end."
